

Dear Dr. Robbins,

Our firm, Winning Strategies Washington, a bipartisan, government affairs/lobbying firm in D.C, would like to extend internship opportunities to students in your Political Science and Government and International Politics Departments. Our office seeks one or two interns each semester for college students with a strong interest in public policy.

Each of our team members was once an intern at some point in our careers, so we feel strongly that our interns have a high quality learning experience and gain first-hand knowledge about the workings of Congress, including current policy debates, the legislative process, and our nation's political process. WSW interns assist our office on numerous fronts, including helping with administrative duties, participating in staff meetings, conducting legislative research, attending congressional hearings, and drafting client reports.

We offer fall, spring, spring and summer internships. Our internships are not paid, although most of our interns receive academic credit hours for their work. We do provide metro fair for our interns and ask that they work at least two days a week.

I am happy to provide you with additional information and look forward to hearing from you.

Thank you,
Becca Carelli-Sennett
